Computer Assisted Language learning (CALL) materials come in two main formats CD/DVD ROM's and web based. Some are tailored to the content to be used in the classrooms whereas others can be used independently CALL materials allow you to work at your own pace.

Multimedia materials offer you opportunity to take part in other computer assisted activities, such as text-based gap-filling, multiple choice and text reconstruction activities. Language teachers often develop such text based CALL activities to accompany a particular course. CALL materials can be regularly updated.

Because CALL learning activity types are usually designed from a template they can sometimes be repetitive

A major advantage of CALL materials is that they offer instant feedback on your spoken or written performance. However such feedback can be limited. If you are more interested in creating your own responses or elaborating on your ideas you may find this type of feedback frustrating. Web based CALL materials can offer more variety through the use of hyperlinks but feedback is still limited.

Just as representations of the cultures of the target language offered by courses using books, audio and video tapes can perpetuate stereotypes

Devotion to work and duty is not only the best form of service to mankind but also the most sublime way of worshipping God. Nothing pleases him more than a noble piece of work done by man. Functionally as well as philosophically the advice contained in the statement is true. Worship is for man's spiritual joy and peace of mind. And he can get them only through when he performs a piece of work he gets a feeling of satisfaction, develops moral strength. He sleeps well, he eats well and lives without fear or tension. Besides his work directly assists God in his mission of creation and betterment. He works for man and in turn for God. It pleases Him the most. There is no better worship to God than a noble piece of work done for human service. We must remember the Miller of the Dee and the man of the Enchanted shirt who received happiness from their work. Such a man makes both his worlds. He lives this life happily and presents a good account of himself before the Lord. Work is the noblest form of worship.
